

Peter Chadwick: 'Schizophrenia: The Positive Perspective'
Chapter 5: 'Getting in to psychosis'

Peter led a nomadic life and had affairs with women and men (for a short period). People who lived as Peter did were often not psychologists, but were writers. He had a hard upbringing from his mother, who told him life was hard and no-one will help you. He was aware of popular attitudes against 'queers'. He was apolitical like Kandinsky. The ways open to him were the Army, fit for brewery, building site, pubs, football terraces. His mother was a hater of Chadwicks and the family she had to bring up. In her age, asylums meant 'mental' and were to be feared. When he was under the bus with blood coming from his damaged hand, he thought of his mother saying 'job done'. She had to get married to his father in 1918, this was deep shame. He was bullied at one time at school (1963-64) because he had a 'queer' haircut and because he did so well at exams - big head and a poof. Later he wondered if he could go schizophrenic, but concluded his mind was too strong for that. In 1974 he was outed as a transvestite and this reinforced his feelings of low self-worth. In 1979 he wrote to teaching colleagues about
