

Child's Guide to Setting Boundaries

Sometimes we have to do things we don't want to do in life - wash the dishes, do our maths homework, hang our uniform up after school.

But sometimes there are things we can make a decision about doing. These may include answering private questions or letting someone call us by a name we don't like. If something is making you feel uncomfortable, it is important to speak up - you don't have to let someone make you feel that way. The trick is to know what to say and say it firmly but politely. If you get or my people respond how what you are trying to tell them.

Think of a situation recently when you felt uncomfortable. It could be at school, at a friend's house or even at home. Fill in the thought bubbles below with information about the situation. Then think of some things you could have said to stop it. You can use our suggestions or think of your own.
