

Social Legislation and Role of Social Worker in Legal Assistance

* Dr. Anupama Bhatnagar

Introduction

The Indian Constitution provides equal protection of laws to all citizens. By implication, they are should not only have just laws, but also see that they are justly administered and implemented. With the lapse of the last one year of decade for the year end the social justice. However, in the interest of justice and welfare, a humane legislature that special measures are taken to protect those vulnerable and marginalized sections and one such measure is the enactment of special laws which specifically aim at social justice which are collectively called as social legislation.

As a consequence of various sociological, economic, social and political factors prevalent and social inequalities take place in different forms in our society. To combat the consequences of all these inequalities, these individuals, groups and institutions need special approaches, programmes and measures and legislations in case of such approach. We have specific legislations for care, protection and removal of neglected, deprived and street children, sexual and exploitation of begging women children for
