Acquisition Strategy Process And Organization For Innovative Systems:

An Acquisition Strategy, Process, and Organization for Innovative Systems ,2000 There is a widespread belief that in the future some military threats might be quite different from those of the recent past requiring a response by innovative system and employment concepts Our present weapon system acquisition process was designed for a different environment than the one that exists today and seems ill suited to meet demands posed by the apparent expansion of unconventional and asymmetric threats In response to this new environment recent calls for reform have placed special emphasis on the need for an acquisition process that is better able to satisfy the need for truly innovative system concepts We outline a suggested acquisition strategy process and organization that would operate in conjunction with the present process and that is specially designed for effective development of novel and more risky system concepts We describe this strategy in enough detail to identify its key elements suggesting how it could work and why we believe it would provide needed capabilities not present in our current acquisition process

Changing Landscape of Defense Innovation Paul Bracken,2008-08 In a rapidly evolving business environment many successful companies have transformed themselves by reexamining their core missions and competencies and exploiting innovation in nontraditional ways Applying this business model to national defense the innovation landscape can be said to have three regions products airplanes tanks ships processes integrated systems and retrofits of legacy systems While the DoD is not a commercial enterprise nor can it change its critical missions as a private firm might do it too operates in a dynamic environment and should be in a continual process of transformation to adjust to and exploit change Achieving the right balance of effort in these three regions will pay handsome dividends
