Pierre Guillet de Monthoux: Action and Existence, Anarchism for Business Administration

1983. New York, Chichester: Wiley. 269 pages.

What a fantastic book! I read and reread it several times before I felt capable of writing this review. This is not a complete overview, but I will try to tell you why I loved this book, and why it should be highly recommended.

The presentation is as interesting as it is unconventional. It starts with a detailed explanation of the contents — a useful aid to a first reading — which helps the reader through chapters which, although they have no apparent order at first sight, do not hinder the flow of arguments. At the beginning, there are also funny and useful bibliographical notes on several authors often quoted in the text and who have influenced the author. These notes give one the tone of the book.

The author does not pretend to be flat and 'objective'; he has values, opinions and wants to present them. For readers of classical textbooks there is a danger here: this book won't be a good companion to fall asleep with after a long working day! It is lively, rich, and I would also say useful in these days where the rightist ideology, the bureaucratization of the world, seems to be taking over after what is called by the international press the 'failure' of the left in western countries, and the well-known and well-documented dramatic evolution of the eastern bloc.

Although this book can be analysed on different levels, I would like to concentrate on two of these: the first has to do with politics; the second with decision-making in organizations, which is certainly the main thrust of the book.

Politically, the book reminds the readers of the existence of different traditions in the left since the beginning of the 19th century, and shows the extent to which, from the very beginning, the communists and those whom he calls the peaceful socialists have disagreed with Proudhon and also with Kropotkin, Bakunin and other representatives of the anarchist tradition.

'It seemed clear to Proudhon that communism and socialism must go their separate ways. The authoritarian nature of communism suppressed the individual in all important respects. The communists use the same weapons as the enemy . . .' (p. 88)

'Proudhon . . . in sharp contrast to the communists opposed all programmes in which the state had a direct role in the distribution of income or in any other controlling economic function.'
