

Percutaneous Coronary Intervention (PCI)

A cardiologist inserts a tiny, deflated balloon into the coronary artery via a catheter to the location of plaque buildup.

Once the balloon has reached the site of blockage or poor blood flow, the balloon is inflated.

A stent is then left in place to hold open the artery and ensure proper blood flow.

The balloon is then deflated, and the catheter and deflated balloon are removed.

ECAB R R Kasliwal, 2012-07-26 Acute coronary syndrome ACS is the term for the clinical signs and symptoms of myocardial ischemia unstable angina non ST segment elevation myocardial infarction NSTEMI and ST segment elevation myocardial infarction STEMI Unstable angina and NSTEMI normally result from a partially or intermittently occluded coronary artery whereas STEMI results from a fully occluded coronary artery The patients present with a wide arena of signs and symptoms like chest pain nausea vomiting exertional pain palpitation shortness of breath fatigue etc Angina or chest pain continues to be recognized as the classic symptom of ACS In unstable angina chest pain normally occurs either at rest or with exertion and results in limited activity Chest pain associated with NSTEMI is usually longer in duration and more severe than chest pain associated with unstable angina The diagnosis of ACS is based on triad of clinical presentation electrocardiography and cardiac biomarkers Electrocardiography is the most important initial diagnostic procedure when doctors suspect an acute coronary syndrome Findings on a 12 lead ECG help the practitioner to differentiate between myocardial ischemia injury and infarction locate the affected area and assess related conduction abnormalities But at the same front the definition of unstable angina NSTEMI and STEMI is based on the levels of cardiac biomarkers too Acute coronary syndromes are medical emergencies that need prompt action Half of deaths due to a heart attack occur in the first 3 4 hours after symptoms begin The sooner treatment begins the better the chances of survival Anyone having symptoms that might indicate an acute coronary syndrome should obtain prompt medical attention Management of ACS involves a spectrum of interventions It encompasses cardiac monitoring thrombolysis antiplatelet therapy anticoagulant therapy reperfusion therapy and invasive investigation and revascularization therapy Reperfusion therapy percutaneous coronary intervention mainly holds for the ST elevation myocardial infarction Prognosis of the ACS patients depends on the post myocardial risk stratification The main highlights of risk stratification are risk stratification scores assessment of cardiac function and stress testing and management

Adjunctive Devices for Patients with Acute Coronary Syndrome Undergoing Percutaneous Coronary Intervention U. S. Department of Health and Human Services, Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, 2013-04-06 Coronary heart disease CHD is a leading cause of morbidity and mortality in the United States According to the American Heart Association statistics greater than 650 000 deaths were attributed to CHD in 2003 Moreover treatment costs for CHD represent the largest healthcare expenditure for a single disease in the United States Acute coronary syndromes ACSs which include the clinical entities of unstable angina UA nonST segment elevation myocardial infarction NSTEMI and ST segment elevation myocardial infarction STEMI account for more than 1 5 million hospital admissions annually in the United States alone Approximately 1 million of these admissions are classified as UA NSTEMI and approximately 500 000 are STEMI Percutaneous coronary intervention PCI has revolutionized the management of angina and myocardial infarction MI frequently negating the need for coronary bypass surgery and permitting a more rapid return to normal activities The clinical use of PCI is reflected in the number of patients who undergo this procedure In the United States alone 664 000 procedures were performed in 652 000 patients in 2003 representing a 326 percent increase from the number of procedures performed in 1987 Coronary stents and adjunctive pharmacologic agents including glycoprotein IIb IIIa receptor inhibitors and thienopyridines have improved the effect of PCI establishing near normal antegrade blood flow in the vast majority of patients However dislodgement of atherothrombotic material from coronary lesions during PCI can result in distal embolization that leads to what is commonly referred to as the no reflow phenomenon This phenomenon characterized by inadequate flow at the cardiac tissue level despite patent coronary vessels is often defined as 1 a thrombolysis in myocardial infarction TIMI flow grade less than or equal to 2 despite vessel patency and the absence of dissection spasm or distal macroembolus 2 a myocardial blush grade MBG of 0 or 1 Table 2 or 3 a contrast perfusion defect observed upon myocardial contrast echocardiography Depending on the exact clinical definition used the incidence of no reflow has been found to range from 12 to 39 percent and may be associated with advanced age presence of diabetes mellitus left ventricular systolic dysfunction longer ischemic times poor initial TIMI flow grades and anterior myocardial infarction Our objective was to perform a Comparative Effectiveness Review examining the benefits to harms associated with using adjunctive devices to remove thrombi or protect against distal embolization in patients with ACS who are undergoing PCI of native vessels The Key Questions KQs examined in this report are KQ 1 In patients with ACS who are undergoing PCI of native vessels what are the comparative effects of adjunctive devices from different classes e g thrombus aspiration mechanical thrombectomy distal balloon embolic protection distal filter embolic protection proximal balloon embolic protection on intermediate outcomes e g ST segment resolution MBG TIMI 3 flow ejection fraction and distal embolization and final health outcomes mortality MACE health related quality of life KQ 2 In patients with ACS who are undergoing PCI of native vessels how do the rate and type of adverse events e g coronary dissection coronary perforation prolonged procedure time differ between device types when compared to PCI alone KQ 3 In patients with ACS who are undergoing PCI of native vessels which patient characteristics e g gender age ethnicity diabetes smoker ejection fraction primary or rescue PCI use of glycoprotein IIb IIIa inhibitors ischemia time presence of a thrombus containing lesion infarctrelated artery and pre PCI TIMI flow use of direct stenting affect outcomes
