Biological Responses In Cancer Progress Toward Potential Applications Vol 1:

Biological Responses in Cancer Enrico Mihich, 2012-11-16 The series of volumes entitled Biological Responses in Cancer Progress toward Potential Applications will provide information on approaches through which the interaction between neoplastic and normal cells may be modified Each annual volume will contain contributions in areas where significant progress has been made Topics to be dealt with include immunologic and host defense systems control mechanisms of cell and population growth cell differentiation and cell transformation The regulatory mechanisms controlling the interactions between normal and tumor cells may be immunologic in nature or they may relate to diverse biological characteristics of tumor and normal cells and their response to micro environmental factors While the central question of tumor immunology addresses the nature and uniqueness of tumor associated antigens in humans the identification of the stages of differentiation and functions of the various cell types involved in immunity is advancing rapidly The development of monoclonal antibody methodologies together with progress in the biochemical characterization of cell markers cell separation and measurement of cell functions has significantly aided in the identification and quantitation of different cell types Establishing the role of these cells in the regulation of human immune mechanisms offers a means for evaluating the status of the immune responses in cancer patients and for assessing the effects tumor and antitumor treatments may exert on their functionality which in turn may alter the effects of antitumor treatments

Mihich, Yoshio Sakurai, 1985-04 Biological Responses in Cancer Enrico Mihich, 2013-11-11 The series of volumes entitled Biological Responses in Cancer provides information on approaches through which the interaction between neoplastic and normal cells may be modified Topics discussed in various volumes include immunological and host defense systems control mechanisms of cell and population growth cell differentiation and cell transformation This volume is specifically concerned with various aspects of cell interactions and regulation within heterogeneous tumor cell populations and their role in tumor progression and metastasis Knowledge in this area is likely to provide new leads toward the exploitation of novel cellular sites and mechanisms in the development of new types of therapies of cancer Several topics are discussed within these general areas of consideration The possibly unique characteristics and mechanisms of tumor vascularization and the potential sites of interference with angiogenesis that might have therapeutic implications are critically evaluated Tumor cell normal tissue interactions involved in different phases of the growth and metastatic processes are discussed in two chapters dealing with mechanisms of tumor invasion and with the role of collagen in mammary tumor growth here again potential leads are identified that may be exploited toward the development of new therapeutic approaches The evolution of phenotypic diversity as a phenomenon complicating the biology of tumor metastasis and consequently affecting the opportunities offered by chemotherapy is also critically considered Immunotoxicology The Commission of the European Communities & UNEP, ILO, WHO International Programme on Chemical Safety, 1987-02-28 IX The International Seminar on the Immunological System as a Target for Toxic Damage was held at The Commission of the European Communities CEC in Luxembourg on 6-9 November 1984. It was organized by the CEC and the International Programme on Chemical Safety of UNEP, ILO, WHO with the support of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, USA and with the participation of the International Society of Immunopharmacology. These bodies are actively concerned with the scientific and applied aspects of immunotoxicology. The Seminar consisted of thirty-four invited papers and three major panel discussions covering current and future test strategies for the screening of immunotoxic substances, hypersensitivity, and the health implications of immunotoxicological problems. It was attended by more than 200 scientists from 27 countries representing all the Member States of the European Economic Community and the six Regions of the World Health Organization. These scientists represented many different disciplines and interests. The Seminar's principal objectives were a review of recent advances in knowledge concerning the structure, function, and dysfunction of the immunological system; a review of the effects of xenobiotics on the immune system in animals and humans; an examination of the human health implications of immunotoxicity; discussion and critical analysis of the procedures for the assessment of immunological damage; a discussion of needs for the further development of laboratory and epidemiological methods and their validation; and a consideration of current test strategies.

Treatment of Multiple Sclerosis Richard A. Rudick, Donald

E. Goodkin, 2012-12-06 Multiple sclerosis is one of the major current problems in neurological practice. It remains incompletely understood yet is a common cause of chronic disability in developed Western societies. Patients with the disease have difficulty understanding what has happened to them and become bewildered by the contrast between the evidently large body of knowledge concerning the clinical manifestations and course of the disease and the conflicting views they so often receive from different specialists as to the best current management of their disease. As in so many disorders for which treatment is only partially effective at best, alternative therapies abound. Dr Rudick and Dr Goodkin have extensive experience in the day to day management of multiple sclerosis at the Mellen Center for Multiple Sclerosis Treatment and Research attached to the Cleveland Clinic. In this book they have assembled a group of experts from several countries and have provided a comprehensive review of the results of different treatments of the disease. Each treatment is considered in the light of its proposed scientific basis or mode of action and in relation to ethical and trial design issues. This information deserves to be made widely available. As the treatment of multiple sclerosis enters a new era as a result of the new understanding of the cellular mechanisms of demyelination and the molecular biology of the immune response, this information about current treatments assumes additional importance. The book is of interest to all physicians concerned with the management of patients with the disease. ICRDB Cancergram, 1986 British Journal of Cancer, 1984-07
