The Face of Appalachia Tim Barnwell, 2021-05 The Face of Appalachia Portraits from the Mountain Farm is the culmination of over twenty years of work by acclaimed photographer Tim Barnwell Combining beautiful landscapes with tender portraits his remarkable black and white images provide a stunning record of a vanishing way of life on the remote mountain farms of rural Appalachia Over one hundred photographs printed here in elegant duotone reproductions are combined with conversations with the subjects to give us an insight into the daily lives activities and dreams of the hard working proud and resourceful men and women of this unique area of our country Transcending their geographical origins these photographs give us a look at how our forefathers lived for generations with seemingly little change in the decades before modern industry roads and technology transformed the country from an agrarian to an industrial economy and then to the information age we live in today The rugged and remote mountains of the southern Appalachian region have served to isolate and preserve the last vestiges of life as it once was throughout rural America By documenting this disappearing way of life Mr Barnwell has captured the essence beauty and rugged character of the rural landscape and its people for this and future generations
