African Camp Fires Stewart Edward White, 2020-02-03 African Camp Fires is a first-hand account of a foot safari in Africa. The book describes various hunts and kills. White tells of the day-to-day experiences and difficulties of life in the African bush. There are many interesting hotels scattered about the world, with a few of which I am acquainted and with a great many of which I am not. Of course, all hotels are interesting from one point of view or another. In fact, the surest way to fix an audience's attention is to introduce your hero or to display your opening chorus in the lobby or along the facade of a hotel. The life, the movement, and colour, the drifting individualities, the pretence, the bluff, the self-consciousness, the independence, the ennui, the darting or lounging servants the very fact that of those before your eyes seven out of ten are drawn from distant and scattered places are sufficient in themselves to invest the smallest hostelry with glamour It is not of this general interest that I would now speak Nor is it my intention at present to glance at the hotels wherein quaintness is specialized whether intentionally or no There are thousands of them and all of them well worth the discriminating traveller's attention Concerning some of them as the old inns at Dives sur Mer and at Mont St Michel whole books have been written These depend for their charm on a mingled gift of the unusual and the picturesque There are as I have said thousands of them and of their cataloguing should one embark on so wide a sea there could be no end
