

TO A FLAPPER

BY W. A. H.

Intoxicating creature, with your charm of form and feature,
We shun you, yet we like you, though we couldn't tell you why.
You've ideas that seem romantic, shunning everything pedantic,
And you're oft inclined to gloat upon your doings on the sly.

You're an egotist eternal; you're an atheist infernal,
For you have no other god but Self, it's plainly to be seen,
And you'll never be converted, for your mind is so perverted
That it always touches both extremes, but never strikes a mean.

Your kind is bred in college, and the thin veneer of knowledge
You acquire attending classes you consider useless waste;
And your chief desire in living lies in taking, not in giving,
And we call you mercenary—yet we all admire your taste.

Your lips were made for kissing, but your self-restraint is missing;
You're a rabid, cheap Bohemian; we curse you to the skies;
And your theories are glowing, yet there's bitter gall in knowing
You're conceited—yet consider: who are we to criticise?

We can rant and rave about you, we can hold you up and flout you,
We can sear you with invective till we blush for very shame,
We can say that we detest you—yet when once we have caressed
you,
Though we sneer at you in public . . . yet we love you, just the same!
