Recorded at T.T.G. Studios, Los Angeles, on January 21st 1973, with the same personnel, except Allan Reuss is on guitar in place of Tony Rizzi and Vic Feldman on percussion replaced Larry Bonker.

All the arrangements are by Paul Smith. The original 8-track tapes were re-mixed at the Decca Studios, London, by Iain Churches.

To most people, 30 years is a whole lifetime away, another era slowly subsiding into the mists of time and becoming part of the history book, to be read about and pondered over with nostalgic longing — at least for the good things. And speaking of good things, how can anyone forget one of the best of these — Bing. Because Bing started out a whole lifetime ago, but it doesn't seem anything like that. In 1923, he started out and sang his way affectionately into the hearts of millions of people around the world. Not that his style was necessarily allocutaneous — in fact, the notice he got in his early days was because of his forthright and aggressive approach to a song. Decca was the light, airy tenor-like delivery of the vocalists of the 20's. Crosby came along with a new style that was to change all that and a lot of this change probably came about as a result of Bing's love of early jazz, and his occasional foray into the way of singing in a style complementary to a hot trumpet, or trombone, or clarinet, or —

And that is what this record is partly about.

Bing: About the "Southern Memoir" — I wanted to sing these great songs that were such hits in their day, with modern accompaniment. Accompaniments have changed to such a degree in the last few years, that it seemed to me these songs with up-to-date backing — for would be somewhat enhanced. We didn't do it in every song — for instance "Chesapeake Bay" is the same as it was before. But that's what Paul Smith had in mind when we made the songs, and when they came out, they sounded to me like a very happy combination of the old and the new. The lyrics, of course, are the old, solid, sentimental type that these songs all had, and when you combine your theme with this more modern style of accompaniment, I think it makes for a very interesting combination.

C.M.: Paul Smith has been around for quite a while — he was turning out some interesting recordings in the 50's. On some tracks on this album, his style could be blamed somewhat on George Shearing. Some might say that is not so modern now.

Bing: Oh, that's quite right. But Paul has some rhythms going that I believe are unique.

C.M.: Two tracks on the album are somewhat out of character, as you mentioned, at least regarding the accompaniment. There is that amazing sequence in the middle of "Morning Glories" when the band goes up Guy Lombardo — an interesting change of pace.

Bing: Oh yes, Paul's got a great sense of humour. He took around a lot on the piano. He does a lot of things with Sammy Davis, where Sammy has ideas and challenges Paul to emulate on the keyboard what he has done. It's one of the greatest pieces of two-man entertainment I've ever heard or seen. Paul then plays back to Sammy, and so they go on, urging one another on to more and more intricate patterns. It's a helluva routine!

C.M.: It's a pity that Paul isn't better known here, Bing, you've made a lot of records, but this must be the first time you have gone into a studio of your own volition, instead of fulfilling obligations to others, and at their behest.

Bing: Yes, but these things seemed so great to me, I just felt I'd like to try them. I hope they are a bit of a surprise to a lot of people.

Well, I think they make an intriguing change to what Bing has been doing in song in recent years. I hope you think so, too, and we all hope that Bing will continue giving joy and pleasure for a long time to come.
