French Polynesia, the Nuclear Tests, 1981 French nuclear testing at Moruroa Atoll is of particular concern to the peoples of the Pacific At first the tests were conducted in the atmosphere and detectable amounts of radiation were recorded as far away as New Zealand Since the mid 1970s however the tests have been conducted underground Coral atolls are not designed to withstand nuclear explosions and it is no surprise that severe fracturing of the atoll should occur Releases of radioactivity through these fractures are not measured However it is inconceivable that they do not occur and it is not the people of France but the peoples of the Pacific who are being affected The campaign against the French nuclear testing at Moruroa Atoll is however just one small part of a much larger campaign That campaign will end when there are no more nuclear weapons anywhere when the world is in peace when the human race lives in harmony with its environment Introduction *Proceedings of the ...
