

Section VII

Part I

1¹ If a man enters an orchard and steals the peaches and plums, everyone who hears about it will condemn him, and if those above who administer the government catch him they will punish him. ²Why? Because he injures others to benefit himself. When it comes to carrying off dogs, swine, chickens, and piglings, the deed is even more unrighteous than entering an orchard to steal peaches and plums. ³Why? Because the loss to others is greater. ⁴It shows a greater lack of benevolence and is a more serious crime. ⁵When it comes to breaking into another man's stable and seizing his horses and cows, the deed is even more unrighteous than carrying off dogs, swine, chickens, and piglings. ⁶Why? Because the loss to others is greater, and if the loss is greater, it shows a greater lack of benevolence and is a more serious crime. ⁷And when it comes to murdering an innocent man, stripping him of his clothing, and appropriating his spear and sword, the deed is even more unrighteous than breaking into a stable and seizing someone's horses and cows. ⁸Why? Because the injury to others is even greater, and if the injury is greater, it shows a greater lack of benevolence and is a more serious crime.

2¹ Now all the gentlemen in the world know enough to condemn such acts and brand them as unrighteous. ²And yet when it comes to the even greater unrighteousness of offensive warfare against other states, they do not know enough to condemn it. ³On the contrary, they praise it and call it righteous. Is this what it means to know the difference between righteousness and unrighteousness?

3¹ If someone kills one man, he is condemned as unrighteous and must pay for his crime with his own life. ²According to this reasoning, if someone kills ten men, then he is ten times as unrighteous and should pay for his crime with ten lives, or if he kills a hundred men he is a hundred times as unrighteous and should pay for his crime with a hundred lives.

4¹ Now all the gentlemen in the world know enough to condemn such crimes and brand them as unrighteous. ²And yet when it comes to the even greater unrighteousness of offensive warfare against other states, they do not know enough to condemn it. ³On the contrary, they praise it and call it righteous. ⁴Truly they do not know what unrighteousness is. ⁵So they make a record of their wars to be handed down to posterity. ⁶If they knew that such wars were unrighteous, then what reason would they have for making a record of their unrighteous deeds to be handed down to posterity?

5¹ Now if there were a man who, on seeing a little bit of black, called it black but, on seeing a lot of black, called it white, we would conclude that he could not tell the difference between black and white. ²Or if there were a man who, on tasting a little bit of bitterness, called it bitter but, on tasting a lot, called it sweet, we would conclude that he could not distinguish between bitter and sweet. ³Now when a great wrong is committed and a state is attacked, men do not know enough to condemn it, but on the contrary praise it and call it righteous. ⁴Is this what it means to be able to distinguish between righteousness and unrighteousness? ⁵So we know that the gentlemen of the world are confused about the distinction between righteousness and unrighteousness.
