

User Guide: Career Conversation Guides

CEB Corporate Leadership Council®

Introduction

Our research shows that career partnerships can increase employees' career satisfaction and thereby reduce the likelihood of internal skills shortages by up to 30%, as well as increase employees' intent to stay by up to 11%. Effective career conversations are a key aspect of successful career partnerships; managers and, in turn, the organization learn what employees aspire to, and employees gain an understanding of what they can achieve and what the organization needs.

These conversation guides are based on our newest insights on career development, and they emphasize the importance of openly discussing an employee's employability and aligning employee aspirations with capability needs.

Career partnerships align employee interests with organizational capability needs by creating transparency into experiences that build necessary skills, motivating employees to pursue career growth, building awareness of internal opportunities, and improving talent sharing via talent brokerage.

Employability is an employee's capabilities, skills, knowledge, experiences, achievements, and personal attributes that make him or her more valuable internally and externally and, therefore, more likely to achieve career success. Our research shows that employability, even more than title progression, improves employees' career satisfaction.
