In Act III, the band is assembled within a wild mountain gorge, waiting to carry their bales into the city. Don José is also there, but he takes no interest in their enterprise and bitter regrets continually assail him. Carmen, already tired of her half-hearted lover, tauntingly advises him to go back to his mother; she persists in tormenting him, although the cards, in truth, she implicitly believes, foretell that she is doomed to the speedy death which his gloomy looks presage. The band departs.

leaving don Jose to mount guard over goods left behind for another trip. Wreala, unseen by him, approaches; she catches sight of don Jose but at the same instant he levels his carbine and fires in her direction. Overcome by fright, she swoons and smashes down behind the rocks. The shot, however, was aimed at Escamzillo, who clammers unharmed over the rocks and introduces himself to don Jose, whose pleasure at their meeting is quickly turned to bitterest hatred when Escamzillo nonchalantly announces his errand to meet his sweetheart, Carmen. A terrible duel ensues, fought with the deadly Navajas, large keen-bladed clasp knives. Escamzillo is saved by the unexpected intervention of Carmen, whose love is now wholly transferred to him and leaves the scene defiantly. The smugglers are about to follow when they spy Micaela, who awakened from her swoon, implores don Jose to hasten to his dying mother. Unable to resist this appeal, he goes but warns Carmen that they will meet again elsewhere.
