

Recovery is not linear. Your journey will likely not follow a straight line, but instead might be circular moving in and out of stages until you feel you are ready to move forward and reconnect with your goals and dreams.

Stages of Complex Trauma Recovery

Based on Judith Herman's model

Stage 1: Education, Stabilization and Safety

Education helps normalize doubts. Your nervous system and brain are responding exactly the way it was designed to respond after having survived repeated traumatic experiences.

Two sets of goals that are typically worked on in this stage with the help of a counselor, caseworker, or other helping professional are:

- Basic Health Needs - Regulation of sleep, Eating, Exercise, Drugs & Alcohol, Destructive Behavior,
- Basic Environment Needs
Physical Self Protection, Work & Money, Secure Living Situation

Stage 2: Processing - Remembering & Mourning

Inner healing practitioners or counselors work on going through all the traumatic memories and taking the incoherent pieces and working it into a more coherent whole.

Cognitive based approaches associated with Somatic are best to release body memories and make it less triggering.

- Uncovering proceeds in small steps.
- Memories evoke intense grief
- Goal is integration, not catharsis

Memories of several representative traumatic events and periods are processed but not every single memory as the emotional content is often the same.

Stage 3: Meaning & Reconnection

This stage is where inner healing is especially helpful in identifying faulty coping mechanisms and lies that were believed and dealing with existential questions like "Why did God allow this to happen to me? Why am I here? And what does it all mean for me?"

- Expanded Peer relationships
- Intimate relationships
- Family relationships
- Reintegration at successive stages
- Social action and survivor mission

"You've worked your traumatic memories, you able to re-control traumatically symptoms and have a coherent system of meaning, and belief that integrates the trauma."

Duration & Continuity: Each of these stages can last months to years depending on the severity, duration, and age of onset of the trauma. The stages also may not follow one another directly, with breaks taken between the stages and sometimes relapses occur to previous stages of recovery. People may be done with recovery after stage one or after stage two based on personal comfort level and goals.

Support after trauma is critical for recovery. "Recovery can take place only within the context of relationships, it cannot occur in isolation. In her renewed connection with other people, the survivor re-creates the psychological facilities that were damaged or deformed by the traumatic experience. The first principal of recovery is empowerment of the survivor. She must be the author and editor of her own recovery." - Judith Herman

Control Theory to Enhanced Oil Recovery W. Fred Ramirez, 1987-01-01 In recent years enhanced oil recovery techniques have received much attention in the oil industry Enhanced oil recovery methods can be divided into three major categories thermal processes which include steam flooding steam stimulation and in situ combustion chemical processes which include surfactant polymer injection polymer flooding and caustic flooding and miscible displacement processes which include miscible hydrocarbon displacement carbon dioxide injection of large amounts of rather expensive fluids into oil bearing reservoir formations Commercial application of any enhanced oil recovery process relies upon economic projections that show a decent return on the investment Because of high chemical costs it is important to optimize enhanced oil recovery processes to provide the greatest recovery at the lowest chemical injection cost The aim of this book is to develop an optimal control theory for the determination of operating strategies that maximize the economic attractiveness of enhanced oil recovery processes The determination of optimal control histories or operating strategies is one of the key elements in the successful usage of new enhanced oil recovery techniques The information contained in the book will therefore be both interesting and useful to all those working in petroleum engineering petroleum management and chemical engineering

Complete Recovery Michael Picucci,1996 This book reflects what has been learned about the recovery process since the founding of Alcoholics Anonymous in 1935 Michael Picucci maintains that the spiritual philosophy of the Twelve Step other recovery movements leads individuals through the first stage of healing Building on this foundation he defines Stage Two An Expanded Model of Self Healing in Community It is here that recovering people often seek psychotherapy questioning what they are doing wrong because they feel so empty limited This book demonstrates that there is a path to emotional healing fulfillment for those who have suffered addictions or harmful exposures in earlier years Dr Picucci does not feel that complete recovery means that one is cured of addictive appetites However he feels that a person who has been overwhelmed by an addiction has recovered a state of equilibrium can also feel fulfilled complete as a human being In his new timely vision of personal joy realization Michael Picucci offers a succinct guide for the remainder of the journey He helps students workshops clients colleagues to recognize the mysterious ways in which personal struggles can bring focus fulfillment to their life purpose
