

Air pollution damage starts in the womb with health effects that can last a lifetime

Inhaled air pollutants can be deposited into the lungs, where they alter lung defenses. Some enter directly into the bloodstream and deeper tissues, including the heart, brain and other organs.

Children are not little adults. They have unique vulnerabilities.

Air pollution impacts developing bodies and brains.

Health impacts can last a lifetime.

Pregnancy

- Pregnant woman inhales increased amount of air per minute
- Some pollutants can cross placenta and reach the fetus; These include air pollution resulting from the use of inefficient, polluting fuels and technologies and/or from second-hand smoke

- Maternal changes due to air pollution exposure, such as inflammation and oxidative stress, indirectly affect fetus
- Negative impacts on development of respiratory, cardiovascular, immune, endocrine and nervous systems

- Maternal health: Gestational diabetes, pre-eclampsia, gestational hypertension, and postpartum depression
- Adverse birth outcomes: Low birth weight, miscarriage, preterm birth, stillbirth
- Impacts on lifelong child health: Congenital heart defects, pneumonia in first year of life, neurodevelopmental disorders, stunting, development of asthma, eczema and allergic disease, and high blood pressure

Infancy and Childhood

- Inhale more air per kilogram of body weight and absorb more pollutants relative to adults
- Ineffectively filter pollutants in nasal passages
- Lack ability to control exposure, both indoors and outdoors
- Live closer to the ground, so may breathe in more ground-level pollution

- Lungs, brain and other organs still developing
- Inflammation in children's smaller airways causes proportionally more blockage and resistance to air flow

- Pneumonia
- Upper respiratory tract infections
- Ear infections
- Asthma, allergies and eczema
- Altered growth (stunting and obesity)
- High blood pressure
- Childhood leukemia
- Impaired cognitive development, including autism spectrum disorders

Adolescence

- May spend time outside playing sports, walking to school in high pollution areas and other activities
- Lack control over location of organized sport activities, which may be located near areas of high pollution

- Lung-function development continues in girls until late teens and in boys until early 20s

- Upper respiratory tract infections
- Asthma and allergies
- High blood pressure
- Obesity
- Impaired cognitive development

The Use and Misuse of Science in Natural Resource Damage Assessment Gary S. Mauseth, Don A. Kane, 1995 The Natural Resource Damage Assessment NRDA process generally followed in federal cases is intended to determine and quantify injury and related damages resulting from a pollution event such as an oil spill This paper reviews and comments on the fundamental issues raised by recent NRDA experiences and suggests way in which the process can be significantly improved The paper also reviews regulations developed by the Department of the Interior DOI and the draft regulation proposed by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration NOAA Because NRDA is in large part fundamentally a scientific inquiry the paper addresses the current difficulties complexities and constraints in applying the scientific method to real time pollution events such as oil spills In addition these pollution events in particular large oil spills generate enormous public scrutiny creating great political pressures on natural resource trustees and those named as responsible for the spill in determining natural resource damages based on uncertain data A workable and reasonable NRDA result requires careful use of available scientific theory and information which is frequently incomplete The potential for resolution of NRDA's raises difficult issues of the proper use of science in the context of the confrontational process of litigation Unfortunately the NRDA process raises the prospect of the improper use of science especially where data are not available or are inconclusive or scientific theory is not clearly established as a tool of selective advocacy serving one side or another rather than the dispassionate search for truth Various options for preventing the misuse of science are presented The authors conclude that if the focus of all participants in the NRDA is the efficient and equitable determination of injury damage and restoration of the environment where possible the potential for misuse of science is minimized Abstract
