

First Reactions to
A CRY OF ABSENCE

A. A. Coakley

"The most important thing in A Cry of Absence is the tragic character of Madison Jones and the way of unfolding again with which the story is told to the end. It is related to any other it might have been related with - courage or with sympathy, and that is what gives it such a great hold on our best feelings."

James Dickey

"Madison Jones is one of our finest creations. A Cry of Absence is his strongest and most moving book. Anyone who picks it up can look forward to a profound and rewarding experience."

Walter Linn

"The writer of the past few years has produced the Madison Jones, A Cry of Absence is his masterpiece. It is as good as Asphyxia, as rich as Guards."

John Burt Foster

"Madison Jones has all sorts of talents, but two stand out and are particularly important: the ability to write with a very strong sense of conviction and the ability to write with a very strong sense of conviction. These things with his technical narrative skills make A Cry of Absence a most remarkable novel."

Richard Wright

"John Burt Foster has had Madison Jones in the Thomas Hardy of the South, in the light of the South. There are several qualities about Jones's writing that are particularly important: the ability to write with a very strong sense of conviction and the ability to write with a very strong sense of conviction. These things with his technical narrative skills make A Cry of Absence a most remarkable novel."

Walter Linn

"Madison Jones's A Cry of Absence is a powerful meditation on the human condition in the South - a meditation on what 'right' and 'wrong' are right and what wrong. The result is a masterpiece of fiction."
