

4 Bicycle Accident Facts

1 3 Feet Rule

In Nevada, you should maintain at least three feet of distance between your vehicle and cyclists. Where possible, vehicles can cross the double line or into the next lane to gain distance between their vehicle and a bicycle. Should a vehicle hit a bike in the bike lane, relevant evidence might include skid marks showing they were too close to the bike lane.

2 Road Signs

Bicycles and motor vehicles are both required to obey properly posted road signs. If the stop or yield sign is obstructed, however, the fault may lie with the city rather than the other driver. Get pictures of the obstructed sign from several angles. Show when the sign first becomes visible to drivers. If it never becomes visible, show that, too.

3 Left Turn Obstructions

Whatever the reason, if a driver turns left and hits a cyclist, he or she is negligent. Eye witness accounts would be really helpful here, as would pictures of the bike in or near the crosswalk. If you can photograph it safely (from inside another vehicle would be best), you should also try to get a picture from the left turn lane showing how visible the cyclist was.

4 School Bus Flashing Lights

If a school bus stops with flashing red lights, all traffic in both directions are supposed to stop and wait to allow children to cross safely. Even if the driver of the vehicle thinks all children have crossed, if they try to go around a bus with flashing lights and hit a pedestrian or bicyclist, they are at fault.
