Library,1893 A Commentary on the Book of Job Samuel Cox,2015-07-17 Excerpt from A Commentary on the Book of Job With a Translation The poets themselves acknowledge Job to be the greatest or at least one of the greatest poems ever written and even the dullest reader can hardly be unaware of a certain magnificence both in its theme and style or fail to cull from it many weighty sentences many noble and picturesque illustrations But with all their admiration of it even our poets as one of the greatest of them has confessed have often failed to catch the argument of the poem its growing disclosure of spiritual truth while many of its less gifted readers have not so much as suspected that any argument was being wrought out in the discussion between Job and his three Friends To indicate and emphasize this argument to shew how it advances from step to step though its advance be veiled from us under Oriental modes of thought and expression was my leading aim in writing this Commentary I must also plead guilty to the ambition of writing an Exposition which any man of ordinary culture might read as he reads other books from end to end with interest and even with pleasure and not simply a Commentary to be consulted here or there now and then And it often tasked my ingenuity to give all necessary explanations on this passage and that indirectly and allusively without constantly bringing the reader to an abrupt haI had still another aim before me which lay very close to my heart About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
