indexed Not illustrated 1916 edition Excerpt GEORGE FREDERICK MUNN A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH THE rare distinction of the genius and personality of George Frederick Munn lay in the extent to which the love of Beauty took possession of his whole being In him the artist was not separated from the man To every one who recognized the source of his power he carried a message of pure joy There was a vital strength and freshness of life touched by imagination and humor in his least expression of what is commonplace to most men and his atmosphere held a sweetness nobility and strength that were repeated in his face The vision of Beauty was ever with him transforming not only his achievement in his art but ultimately whatever for the moment seemed failure into the very wine of life His story falling on modern days of strife for material rewards seems to miss its natural consummation unless it is open to every one in need of his illuminations as were the riches of his heart and mind to those whom he companioned most closely during his life in this world No record of his life would be a true one that did not include the illness resulting from typhus fever which recurred from time to time during the last twenty five years of his life stopping his career as a painter and changing during the period of its recurrence his point of view and standards so causing a misunderstanding of his true character and aims in the minds of all but those who knew him best and saw him through all the changes of his life and circumstances But it is not the purpose of this record to dwell on the misunderstandings and complications resulting from an illness which to a man of his power was a tragic misfortune but rather to attempt to show the man as he was before his illness and also in later years
