Effective Strategies for Building Classroom Community Jacqueline Grzywacz,2009

Visions of the Heart Susan Ammon Young,1996 Purpose The purpose of this inquiry was to examine the concept of classroom community from teachers perspectives Procedures In this qualitative inquiry purposive selection was used to identify four elementary practitioners who purposefully created classroom learning communities A series of three phenomenologically based in depth individual interviews provided the main source of data Findings Four individual participant profiles were crafted from verbatim transcripts and specific strategies used by the teachers were described along with indicators of their effectiveness and influencing factors The individual profiles of the four teachers demonstrated unique emphases as well as commonalities in their approaches to creating classroom community Final analysis of the in depth interviews led to an integrated synergistic view of classroom community Six characteristics emerged as vital elements common goals shared ownership open communication caring relationships security and sense of belonging Two underlying pervasive themes were also identified respect and responsibility The inquiry further revealed that classroom communities whose foundations are rooted in respect and responsibility are learning centered rather than student centered or teacher centered Ultimately the investigation demonstrated that the purposeful actions of individual teachers are essential to the creation of successful learning communities
