

Numu blacksmiths than to the Dyula clans. On p. 20 Dr Fage follows Mrs Meyerowitz in dating the Ashanti conquest of the Techiman area to 1740; it almost certainly occurred at least twenty years earlier. As to the date of the 'about-face' in the gold trade in the sixteenth century (p. 42), it would seem doubtful whether the European merchants, except very locally, established themselves 'as successful competitors with the northern traders' until at least after 1591, when the Moroccan invasion of the Middle Niger created conditions of chaos unfavourable for long-distance trade. Even in the early nineteenth century, for example, Ashanti commercial connexions were still predominantly northern ones. In the third section one regrets the absence of any treatment of the complex Anglo-Ashanti negotiations of 1817-20, so crucial for an understanding of the subsequent unhappy relations between those two powers.

I have noted only two misprints, a somewhat confusing hyphen in the last figure on p. 46, and an intrusive 't' in Bowdich on p. 103.

This book provides a basic frame of reference within which detailed research upon the history of Ghana may (and, it is hoped, will) proceed for some years ahead. Perhaps its author, in turn, will elaborate—and bring into sharper focus than is possible in so concise a work—this invaluable framework.

BUGANDA AND THE BRITISH

Buganda and British Overrule, 1900-1955; Two Studies. By D. A. Low and R. C. PRATT. Published for the East African Institute of Social Research by Oxford University Press, 1960. Pp. 373. 48s.

This volume is described in the Foreword by Dr Lloyd Fallers as the 'first fruit of a collaboration among scholars of several social science disciplines at Makerere College—a collaboration which those involved in it consider to have been uniquely stimulating and productive'. This is a large claim, and no doubt it refers to a meeting of minds before pens were put to paper. For it must be said at once that at the sheerly literary level the fruits of collaboration are not among the more obvious merits of these two very interesting essays. Read as a single book they show an irritating amount of repetition. Not only is there a considerable overlap in the subject matter, but also, for example, a long quotation from a letter of Sir Harry Johnston's which occurs on pp. 56-57 is substantially repeated on pp. 179-80. And a very interesting discussion by Dr Low of the real meaning and significance of Nsiko land, pp. 49-50, is apparently quite unfamiliar to Mr Pratt in his repetitive treatment of the same issue on pp. 182-3. Still more inconsequent, however, is the incongruity between the basic interests and methods of the two authors. It is on this account that the book must be considered as two 'occasional papers' which merely happen to have been bound within the same covers.

Dr Low's paper is primarily an account—probably the definitive account—of the negotiation of the Uganda Agreement of 1900. The documentary evidence has been completely studied and magisterially examined, and the story has been set down in agreeably rotund prose. There are some fresh and valuable insights,
