picturing startled surprise reeled from his saddle clutching at the air his horse dashing madly forward and dragging him head downward among the sharp rocks while Wyman's stricken arm dripped blood. Indeed under that sudden shock he fell and was barely rescued by the prompt action of the man beside him. Dropping the opened book and firing madly to left and right with a revolver which appeared to spring into his hand as by magic the latter coolly dragged the fainting soldier across the more exposed space until the two found partial security among a mass of loosened rocks littering the base of the precipice. The others who survived that first scorching discharge also raced toward this same shelter impelled thereto by the unerring instinct of border fighting and inging themselves at behind protecting bowlders began responding to the hot fire rained upon them.

Keller Randall PARRISH, 1906 Bob Hampton of Placer Randall Parrish, 2020-12-06 It was not an uncommon tragedy of the West. If slightest chronicle of it survive it must be discovered among the musty and nearly forgotten records of the Eighteenth Regiment of Infantry yet it is extremely probable that even there the details were never written down. Sufficient if following certain names on that long regimental roll there should be duly entered those cabalistic symbols signifying to the initiated Killed in action. After all that tells the story. In those old time Indian days of continuous foray and skirmish such brief returns concise and unheroic were commonplace enough. Yet the tale is worth telling now when such days are past and gone. There were sixteen of them when like so many hunted rabbits they were first securely trapped among the frowning rocks and forced relentlessly backward from off the narrow trail until the precipitous canyon walls finally halted their disorganized flight and from sheer necessity compelled a rally in hopeless battle. Sixteen ten infantrymen from old Fort Bethune under command of Syd Wyman a gray headed sergeant of thirty years continuous service in the regulars two cowpunchers from the X L ranch a stranger who had joined them uninvited at the ford over the Bear Water together with old Gillis the post trader and his silent chit of a girl Bob Hampton of Placer Randall Parrish, 2020-04-13 It was not an uncommon tragedy of the West.
