

LECTURETTE: Career Planning

Step 1: Knowing yourself Self-awareness is a critical aspect of career planning. You need to start from yourself. You should know where you are now and where you want to be. Also, this is where you will identify clearly your life and career goals.

Step 2: Finding out You will explore the different job opportunities in the market for career options. You can utilize the Labor Market Information and other resources and tools previously discussed in Session 3 to lookup for job descriptions, wages, job requirements, and job market projection.

Step 3: Making decisions After knowing yourself and exploring possible career opportunities, you now make life and career decisions. This is done through comparing the results of the self-awareness inventory composed of interests, values, personal style, skills, and learning experiences to the current career alternatives.

Step 4: Taking actions This is where you will start working toward the achievement of your life and career goals. You should consider creating support systems (composed of champions that can help you achieve your goals), possible roadblocks and how to deal with them. You should also consider the factors that are getting in your way and those that are leading you toward your goals.
