WHERE TO LOOK

There are a number of nature reserves within the Norfolk Broads where the habitat is managed specially for this spectacular butterfly. Well-known sites are Catfield Fen, How Hill, Strumpshaw Fen and Wharfedale.

LOOK-ALIKES

Unmistakable

The only British representative of the spectacular family of swallowtail butterflies. Our resident race, britannicus, is restricted to the fenlands of the Norfolk Broads.

Adult identification: Unmistakable, thanks to its size, colour and shape. Occasionally, Swallowtails from continental Europe occur in southern England. These are a different race, gopanus (see page 27), and are slightly larger with paler markings. The scars of both races look the same, except that females are usually larger than males.

Behaviour: Adults tend to feed in the morning and evening, attracted especially to yellow iris, thistles and Ragged Robin. When feeding they often flap their wings to maintain their balance. Makes special music of their day on the wing: their flight is powerful, with distinctive flaps and glides. Courtship is spectacular, with both butterflies soaring high into the sky.

Breeding habitat: Our resident race is restricted to open sedge fens and reed marshes in the Norfolk Broads, where Milk-parsley grows abundantly. They may be attracted to garden flowers when these are growing nearby. Migrants from continental Europe are much more catholic in their choice of habitat and foodplants, but are only likely to be seen very occasionally in Britain.

Population and conservation: Thanks to habitat management in the Broads, this species is now flourishing, especially on nature reserves. The Great Fen Project will hopefully lead to their return to one of their old haunts in fenland around The Wash. There is also a possibility that warmer summers could lead to continental Swallowtails becoming established in southern England.

Egg, caterpillar and chrysalis:
Egg (page 208): 1.0 mm (w) x 0.7 mm (h); spherical, shiny yellow at first, becoming dark brown with age.
CATERPILLAR (page 217): 52 mm; resembles a bird dropping at first, but the mature caterpillar is distinctive, with its green body banded with black, and each band spotted with orange.
CHRYSLIS (page 226): 28-32 mm; there are two distinct colour forms: mottled brown and yellowish-green.

Foodplant: Milk-parsley

Normally seen in flight in the second or third week of June, when the population is at its peak.

The British resident britannicus usually has only a single brood, but in some years second brood individuals may be seen on the Broads in August.
