

1.1 Chemical Kinetics

Chemical kinetics is the branch of physical chemistry which deals with a study of the speed of chemical reactions. Such studies also enable us to understand the mechanism by which the reaction occurs. Thus, in chemical kinetics we can also determine the rate of chemical reaction.

From the kinetic stand point the reactions are classified into two groups:

a) homogeneous reactions which occur entirely in one phase b) heterogeneous reactions where the transformation takes place on the surface of a catalyst or the walls of a container.

1.2 Rate of reaction

The rate of reaction i.e., the velocity of a reaction is the amount of a chemical change occurring per unit time.

The rate is generally expressed as the decrease in concentration of a reactant or as the increase in concentration of the product. If  $C$  the concentration of a reactant at any time  $t$  is, the rate is  $-\frac{dC}{dt}$  or if the concentration of a product be  $x$  at any time  $t$ , the rate would be  $\frac{dx}{dt}$ .

The time is usually expressed in seconds. The rate will have units of concentration divided by time.

The concentrations are taken in gm-moles/litre, hence rate is moles/litre/second.

Factors influencing the rate of reaction

Rate of a chemical reaction is influenced by the following factors

(i) Temperature (ii) Concentration of the reactants (iii) Nature of reactants (iv) Catalysts (v) Radiation

(i) Temperature

In most cases, the rate of a reaction in a homogeneous reaction is approximately doubled or tripled by an increase in temperature of only 100 C. In some cases the rise in reaction rates are even higher.

(ii) Concentration of the reactants
