

BASIC ACCOUNTING CONCEPTS AND PRINCIPLES

Accounting Concepts

Accounting principles and standards need to be taken seriously as financial statements and transaction reports go through the scrutiny of many users. Banggawan & Asuncion (2017) provided the following basic accounting assumptions:

1. Going Concern Assumption
 - The underlying assumption in the preparation of financial statements. Financial statements are prepared on the assumption that the entity will continue in operation into the foreseeable future without the need or intention to stop operation.
2. The Business Entity Concept
 - Assumes that all of the business transactions are separate from the business owner's personal transactions. A business is considered distinct from the owner and therefore the two should be treated separately.
3. Accounting Period Assumption
 - An offshoot of the going concern assumption. The presumed indefinite life of the business is broken into distinct equal periods called "accounting period" over which the financial performance and financial condition of the business are accounted for and reported to users of the financial statements.
4. Accrual Basis Assumption
 - Requires that all business transactions and other events are recognized in the accounting records when they occur, rather than when the cash or equivalent is received or paid.
5. Monetary Unit
 - Assumes that only transactions that can be expressed in terms of money are recorded. Hence, any non-financial or non-monetary information that cannot be measured in terms of money are not recorded in the accounting books. A memorandum entry will be prepared instead.

Accounting Principles

The accounting principles are detailed accounting rules and guidelines that entities must follow when measuring, recording, and reporting financial data. Applying these principles enhances reliability, relevance, and consistency of financial information which results in better understanding and decision-making of users. As cited by Rabo, Tugas, & Salendrez, (2016), the following are the basic accounting principles:

1. Cost Principle
 - All assets acquired should be valued and recorded based on the actual cash equivalent or original cost of acquisition, not the prevailing market value or future value.
2. Full Disclosure Principle
 - In the preparation of the financial statements, the accountant should include sufficient information to permit the stakeholders to make an informed judgment about the financial condition of the enterprise.
3. Matching Principle
 - This principle requires that expenses be matched with revenues. It means that in a given accounting period, the revenue recorded should have its corresponding expense recorded, in order to show the true profit of the business.
4. Revenue Recognition Principle
 - Revenues are recognized as soon as goods have been sold (delivered to the customer) or a service has been rendered, regardless of when the money is actually received.
5. Materiality Principle
 - This principle allows an accountant to violate the matching principle if the amount is insignificant. Professional judgment is needed to decide whether an amount is material or immaterial. As a general rule, an item is considered material if knowledge of it would affect the decision of the user of the financial statement.
6. Conservatism or Prudence Principle
 - Accountants apply the conservatism concept when they choose the worst-case scenario for the company when it is faced with significant uncertainties regarding an accounting problem.
7. Objective Principle
