Current Publisher and Origin

The Atlantic Publication of Communication is a peer-reviewed journal that publishes articles on communication technologies fields and categories. Since 2010, Taylor and Francis Ltd., based in the United Kingdom, has published it. It was published and released for the first time in 1993. Atlantic Journal of Communication is the 13766th most favored journal globally ("Atlantic Journal of Communication"). This journal is ranked 0.335 by SCImago Journal Rank (SJR). The journal is dedicated to the examination of theories, practices, and policies relating to communication. AJC is philosophically committed to an interdisciplinary approach to research and publishing high-quality articles regardless of genre, viewpoint, or geographic origin. Contributions on critical communication studies issues and themes and those of broad professional and academic interest are invited.

Journal's Current Subjects

Recently, the magazine examined the link between the media and law enforcement during times of crisis. Additionally, they have written on the media's influence on politics and the need to create faith in its ability to present factual news. Crisis causes a schism between law enforcement officers attempting to carry out their duties while keeping a peaceful and conducive atmosphere and the media focused on breaking news as quickly as possible ("Atlantic Journal of Communication"). Information handling is crucial, and breaking news is often a source of contention between the two sides. The research was done in which participants responded to online questions concerning crises. The results indicate that law enforcement, the media, and the public concur on handling the fabricated event. The media is a particular group when it comes to dissident opinions.

Establishing confidence in the media is critical, even more so in politics where voters depend on information from the media to make their choice. Individuals may
