Solutions to Problems

3.1 Notice that certain functional groups have different designations if other functional groups are also present in a molecule. For example, a molecule containing a carbon-carbon double bond and no other functional group is an alkene; if other groups are present, the group is referred to as a carbon-carbon double bond. Similarly, a compound containing a benzene ring, and only carbon- and hydrogen-containing substituents, is an arene; if other groups are present, the ring is labeled an aromatic ring.
