Topic: Armed Hostilities | Words: 1401 | Pages: 5

War is an upheaval that arises as a result of a misunderstanding among two or more groups of people which can be within a nation, or among states. There are many types of war. One of the examples is conventional warfare and this is where soldiers fight physically with their opponent and the types of weapons used can be nuclear, biological, and chemical. We also have unconventional warfare and this involves issues like the conquering of states which is by use of force. The last type of war is civil warfare and this entails a particular nation fighting within itself. To have a better understanding of the impacts of war we will discuss separately the impact of war on issues like social, economic, political, technological, and legal issues.

Social Impact of War

War has many social impacts most of which are negative. Many lives were lost as a result of war and the reason for this is due to the halt of food production since the available money funds were chained into the production of war weapons and other military requirements. The primary necessities such as food, shelter, and clothing are not produced or if produced they are small therefore they are scarce and secondary needs like education are put aside. Other deaths were as a result of gunshot wounds and bad weather conditions in which the soldiers fought. In this case, war leads to the discovery of one's enemies so that proper strategies are laid down to avoid conflict. War fosters patriotism since during war people have to come together to fight the enemy.

The other bad health impact of war includes emotional distress due to
