Benny and the Butterfly Karen Hutchins Pirnot,Garret Frey,2019-02-07 Unable to use his hands the eight year old illustrator used a laser device on his head to make pictures on the computer Slight head movements would then be locked on to the screen and another head movement would continue the drawing The head movements were much like the starting and stopping of the artisit s brush which would eventually result in a finished piece of art Garret s head movements were meticulous as he diligently brought forth lines and color and suggestions of movement Like the shading of the artist Garret s fractional head movements would transfer images from his mind to the screen of the computer He would correct and revise much the same as the artist would do in the initial stages of producing a painting Every drawing constituted hours at the computer screen And with patience and persistence Garret s drawings became every bit as sophisticated and charming as those of his peers who drew with their hands
