

The little duckling then began to walk around and inspect the village.

Grumpy Gobbler was afraid it would find his secret hoard of worms, but the duckling behaved very well—at least until it tripped over Mamma Gobbler's trumpet!

There was a great quacking and an awful CRASH and there was the trumpet—quite ruined!

The Gobblers were all quite pleased about this really, because they were rather tired of Mamma Gobbler's terrible playing, but, to their dismay, he cried "Never mind—I will have my trumpet. I can play that instead!"

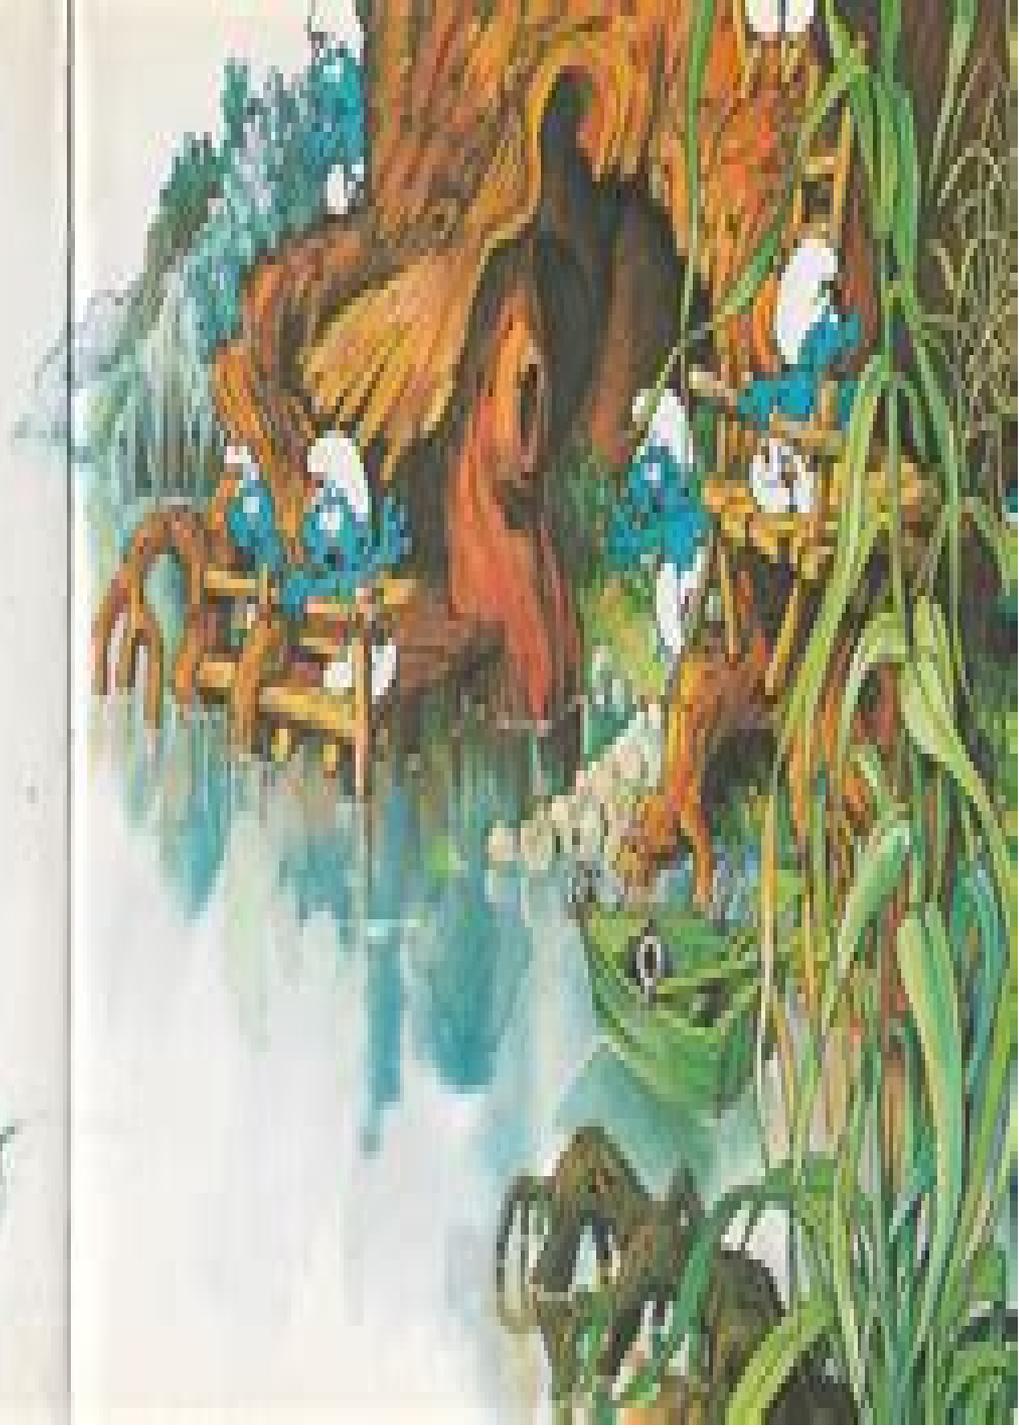

At last the duckling found its way to the Gobblers' pond and with a splash, it poked right into the water!

"Look out! It will drown!" cried Grumpy Gobbler in alarm.

"Don't be silly!" cried the Great Gobbler, "it is a duckling, and ducklings can swim as soon as they are born."

He was right, too, for Dilly Duckling, as they all called the little bundle of yellow feathers, was paddling happily across the pond.

Then Great Gobbler, who had been thinking very hard, spoke again.
