Curriculum Leadership Case Studies For Program Practitioners:

Curriculum Leadership David S. Martin, 1989 The 22 case studies in this book offer a variety of real life school controversies designed to provoke dialogue among students and practitioners The problems presented here demonstrate the inter relatedness of curriculum decision making and problem solving with other educational system functions The case studies are grouped according to five themes 1 curriculum decision making 2 curriculum implementation 3 issues in personnel and curriculum 4 programs for special populations and 5 curriculum evaluation Each case study describes a situation actually experienced by one or more curriculum leaders such as responding to parent objections about classroom materials taking the initiative in improving student test scores revising the curriculum to meet special student needs resolving the dilemma of curriculum ownership and coping with the need to reduce expenditures without damaging the core of the curriculum Each case study includes a brief description of the setting a narrative of relevant events and actions and a list of questions focused on key issues The cases contain neither solutions nor suggestions for possible solutions An appendix offers a summary of issues pertaining to each case MLH
