This part of the guide was similar to the front section of TV Guide and was common to all editions of the guide. It was printed on expensive coated paper and contained color photographs. The second part of each guide, known as the program book, consisted of program listings which were specific to each edition (an "edition" being the guide for a particular local newspaper). This part of the guide contained both text and pictures (the pictures being associated with advertising) but was printed in black and white on newsprint. The program book, like the story book, had to be produced in multiples of four pages. Finally, each guide included a cover-piece of four pages which, as the name
