Current Update In Psychoimmunology:

Current Update in Psychoimmunology Gerhard Wieselmann, 2012-12-06 This book tries to close the gap between immunological findings on the one hand psychological psychopathological electrophysiological and neuroimaging aspects on the other. It deals with the issue of cause and effect of immunological alternatives in different organic and or mental disorders and emphasizes the necessity of considering a variety of treatment strategies. There are dynamic interactions and several important similarities between the immune system and the central nervous system which help to lay the rational basis for psychoimmunology. Both systems have the capacity for memory and both play vital roles in adaptation and defence. Furthermore in each system pathological changes can occur in the event of inappropriate responses to internal or external stimuli leading to psychiatric as well as organic illnesses and autoimmune diseases could also arise as a consequence of dysfunction respectively maladaptation. This book is a good way to approach the field of psychoimmunology and shows that scientists are very active in this domain. Acta Neurologica Belgica

Psychiatry, Psychoimmunology, and Viruses Norbert Müller, 2012-12-06 This volume contains the contributions to the 3rd Expert Meeting in Psychoneuroimmunology held in Munich Germany in autumn 1997. Clinical psychiatrists, neuroscientists and researchers in basic immunology from Europe and the USA gather together annually at this new traditional meeting to discuss new findings and trends in the relationship between psychiatric disorders and the immune system. Pinpointed at the Munich meeting in particular were the possible influence of viral infections on psychiatric disorders especially schizophrenia and the possible pathophysiological mechanisms affecting psychiatric disorders. These mechanisms include viral induced alteration cytokine production and the role of the HLA system. One chapter is devoted to the influence of viral infections during pregnancy another to the first results of experimental therapy especially regarding the immune system. The immunological aspects not only of schizophrenia but also of depression anxiety disorders sleep and headache were also discussed at the meeting and two further chapters cover methodological aspects related to clinical and experimental pitfalls.
