Brain In Hominid Evolution The:

The Lives of the Brain John S. Allen, 2010-02-15 Though we have other distinguishing characteristics walking on two legs for instance and relative hairlessness the brain and the behavior it produces are what truly set us apart from the other apes and primates And how this three pound organ composed of water fat and protein turned a mammal species into the dominant animal on earth today is the story John S Allen seeks to tell Adopting what he calls a bottom up approach to the evolution of human behavior Allen considers the brain as a biological organ a collection of genes cells and tissues that grows eats and ages and is subject to the direct effects of natural selection and the phylogenetic constraints of its ancestry An exploration of the evolution of this critical organ based on recent work in paleoanthropology brain anatomy and neuroimaging molecular genetics life history theory and related fields his book shows us the brain as a product of the contexts in which it evolved phylogenetic somatic genetic ecological demographic and ultimately cultural linguistic Throughout Allen focuses on the foundations of brain evolution rather than the evolution of behavior or cognition This perspective demonstrates how just as some aspects of our behavior emerge in unexpected ways from the development of certain cognitive capacities a more nuanced understanding of behavioral evolution might develop from a clearer picture of brain evolution

Eccles, 2005-07-05 Sir John Eccles a distinguished scientist and Nobel Prize winner who has devoted his scientific life to the study of the mammalian brain tells the story of how we came to be not only as animals at the end of the hominid evolutionary line but also as human persons possessed of reflective consciousness

Survival of the Fattest Stephen C. Cunnane, 2005 How did humans evolve larger and more sophisticated brains In general evolution depends on a special combination of circumstances part genetics part time and part environment In the case of human brain evolution the main environmental influence was adaptation to a OCyshore basedOCO diet which provided the worldOCO's richest source of nutrition as well as a sedentary lifestyle that promoted fat deposition Such a diet included shellfish fish marsh plants frogs birdOCO's eggs etc Humans and more importantly hominid babies started to get fat a crucial distinction that led to the development of larger brains and to the evolution of modern humans A larger brain is expensive to maintain and this increasing demand for energy results in succinctly survival of the fattest The Human Fossil Record, Brain Endocasts--The Paleoneurological Evidence Jeffrey H.
