

The Characteristics of Decision Objectives

As described in previous lectures, decision can be positions in a Strategic- Operational Continuum. In the same way are their objectives.

But strategic and operational objectives have different purposes and will be expressed in different ways. However, the operational level objectives will have been shaped by whatever strategic objectives the firm has adopted.

There must, be some link between strategic objectives and detailed operational objectives. In fact there are different layers of such objectives, which start broad and become more specific as they approach the operational level. This hierarchical structure is explained in the figure:
