

British Decolonization

Experience

- Although there were some conflicts in Kenya (1952-56) and Malaya (1948-1960), the transition from empire was generally peaceful and led to the creation of democratic states.
- Withdrawal from India in 1947 was seen as the most successful act of decolonization as it led to the creation of world's largest democracy
- Both Britain and France sought to maximize their interests while withdrawing from their colonies. The British Commonwealth and the French Union in Africa were the main instruments of serving their advantage.
