Ancient Greek 2000-300 BC

Characteristic of this early furniture were highly influenced by the furniture of the ancient Egyptians with a stiff, rectangular, and unflattering shape. In the 4th and 5th centuries, once the Greeks developed their own style, furniture became less square and rigid and more curved and flowing.

Renaissance 1350-1550 AD

The Italian Renaissance marked a rebirth in furniture design, often inspired by the Greco-Roman tradition. These designs were characterized by opulent, often gilded designs that frequently incorporated a profusion of floral, vegetal and scrolling ornamentation. The aim of these pieces were often to showcase the skills of the craftsmen who made them.

Colonial 1500-1754 AD

Colonial design fulfilled a need for basic, light and multi-functional furniture. Oak and pine were the most common wood. The wood is kept in its natural finish. Straight lines and occasionally s-curves were used to add interest to the design. As the need for comfort grew, fabric, chintz, crevel, damask, and tapestry was used to pad the seat and provide an aesthetic design.

Revival 1800-1900 AD

The 19th century was marked by the Industrial Revolution. With mass-production technology in place it was a simple matter to graft historically correct ornaments onto all sorts of furniture. The result was a century of furniture whose common denominator was excessive ornamentation in the form of applied metal or wood carvings, inlays or stencils.

Bauhaus 1919-1933 AD

Bauhaus is based on the principle of simplicity. The color palette used are mostly basic neutral colours. Bright colors are only used as an accent. Modern industrial techniques make materials like steel, glass, plywood, and plastic available. Marcel Breuer's famous Wassily Chair, used extruded steel tubes, inspired by those on his bicycle.

Modern 1930-1945 AD

The forms of modern furniture sought newness, originality, and technical innovation. It emphasized on glimmering simplicity and geometry of polished metal. The use of new materials, such as steel in its many forms, moulded plywood, plastics, and fibreglass, were formative in the creation of these new designs. They were considered pioneering, even shocking at the time especially in contrast to what came before.

Ancient Egyptian 3000-2000 BC

Furniture was essentially a novelty at this time, so poorer Egyptians did pretty much everything on the ground. Chair is exclusive for royalty only, a symbol of great richness and splendor. Most furniture was made of heavy, rigid, natural wood. It mainly has silver or gold ornaments with animal or plant as a decorative elements.

Medieval 500-1450 AD

This period was a stark and crude time, and that is reflected in the furniture styles of the era. Its most notable characteristics are ornate wood carvings on the border of chairs, garish structural layouts and colours that are basically grey, beige or black. Forms were mainly square or rectangular with very little in the way of curved lines or circular forms.

Jacobean 1567-1625 AD

The Jacobean style was born out of the English Early Renaissance. There was a gradual change to a less ornamented, quieter style of furniture. Jacobean furniture is characterized by straight lines, ornate carvings, and dark finish.

Rococo 1725-1775 AD

The Rococo was an artistic movement of the 18th century, in which the wealthy rejected the regal sobriety of the Baroque for a lighter, softer aesthetic. Its characteristics are opulent featuring excessive gilding and silver-plating. It used lighter woods and pastel colors to create a much softer, sinner aesthetic.

Art Nouveau 1890-1914 AD

The name "Art Nouveau" is French for "new art", and it emerged in the late 19th century in Paris. Art Nouveau furniture used lines and curves as graphical ornamentation. Hard woods and iron were commonly used to provide strong yet slim supporting structures to a furniture pieces.

Geometric shapes, often in the form of zigzags or chevrons, are common. It emphasized smooth streamlined surfaces and often used bold and high contrast colours.
