A History of Oregon, 1792-1849 Drawn From Personal Observation and Authentic Information William Henry Gray, 1870-01-01 In all countries it is difficult to trace the history of their early discovery and settlement That of Oregon is no exception The Spanish claim and it is generally conceded that they were the discoverers of the coast and gave names to the principal capes and to Fuca s Straits No evidence can be found in national archives or among the native tribes of the country that gives the discovery of the Columbia River to any civilized people but to the Bostons Americans so that so far as civil history or national testimony is concerned we are without any except the conjectures of men as ignorant as ourselves Hence we are left to the alternative of searching the old logs of vessels and such old books as have been written and in connection with the legends and statements of the aborigines of the country form an opinion as to its discovery and from such dates and conclusions commence its civil history That of Oregon begins eight years previous to the commencement of the present century A ship owned by Messrs Barrell Bulfinch Co of Boston and commanded by Captain Robert Gray discovered and entered the mouth of the third great river upon the American continent It then had no name known to the civilized world This unselfish American instead of following the example of many contemporary British navigators by giving his own name to the majestic river he had discovered gave it that of his noble ship Columbia On the 7th of May 1792 he discovered and ran in abreast of Cape

Hancock and anchored and on the 11th ran ten miles up this river on the north side which is now known as a little above Chinook Point and at 1 P M they came to anchor On the 14th they weighed anchor and ran according to the ship s log fifteen miles which would bring them up abreast of Tongue Point where their ship grounded upon a sand bar for a short time but they backed her off into three fathoms of water and anchored By sounding they discovered that there was not sufficient water to pass up the river in their present channel Having filled all their water casks repaired painted and calked the ship and allowed the vast numbers of Indians that thronged around them in the most peaceable and friendly manner to visit and traffic with them on the 20th of May 1792 they went to sea again On the 20th of October of this year the Chatham commanded by Captain Broughton of the British navy entered the river He grounded his ship on what is now called the Sulphur Spit and found in the bay the brig Jennet Captain Baker from Bristol Rhode Island Captain Broughton explored the river in his small boat as high up as the present site of Vancouver and left the river with his ship on the 10th of November

Providence and the Invention of American History Sarah Koenig,2021-01-01 How providential history the conviction that God is an active agent in human history has shaped the American historical imagination In 1847 Protestant missionary Marcus Whitman was killed after a disastrous eleven year effort to evangelize the indigenous peoples of the Pacific Northwest By 1897 Whitman was a national hero celebrated in textbooks monuments and historical scholarship as the Savior of Oregon But his fame was based on a tall tale one that was about to be exposed Sarah Koenig traces the rise and fall of Protestant missionary Marcus Whitman s legend revealing two patterns in the development of American history On the one hand is providential history marked by the conviction that God is an active agent in human history and that historical work can reveal patterns of divine will On the other hand is objective history which arose from the efforts of Catholics and other racial and religious outsiders to resist providentialists pejorative descriptions of non Protestants and nonwhites Koenig examines how these competing visions continue to shape understandings of the American past and the nature of historical truth
