A House Full Of Children:

A House Full of Children Betty Mays,2005-08-01 Fatherhood is hard to explain There are no explanations There are as many encounters with children as there are particles in the air Plus fatherhood has the most confusing instructions in the bible accept the death of one son by the hand of another Build an ark in the forest miles from water in a land where rain is a pleasure Kill your son don t kill your son I ll provide a lamb Send him to war with a slingshot against a giant Walk into a fiery furnace Sit in a lion s den Hang on a cross with nails in your hands and feet thorns piercing your brow scorned and beaten by those you could be dying for Who wouldn t be confused Everywhere everyone wants to be at peace in a world where peace cost money Fathers were finding it harder to provide for a family The money was flowing but honest ways to acquire it was as scarce as there were new ideas In the near future the eye to the way of life will open and scientists will shift their attention from the survival of the body to the destination of the spirit as studies of past conditions have led them to believe you cannot avoid dying you will live or lie in a grave until you are forgotten alone forever with fading memories unless you can go to the promised unknown When the last thought of you fades you are simply gone There are fathers who leave children never knowing who they are There are fathers who drop them when they become of legal age not a part of their adult lives imprisoned in mind body soul and or spirit There are fathers who are missing in one component of their being gone before a child realizes their value There are fathers who die and are forgotten There are fathers who live forever in the hearts of children On the other hand there are children who rebel against their parents There are children who are hard to teach right from wrong There are children who have no remorse in their troubled spirits A time when the
