Black Milk Rosemarie Krausz,2023-08-14 The project of the book of poems black milk is to trace the effects of the Holocaust and anti Semitism through several generations of the author s family making it a historical memoir in poetry The author interweaves lyric and narrative poems about her two parents how they lived before the Holocaust affected them how they survived Auschwitz and Theresienstadt and how they experienced life after they left Europe to live in Canada Trauma and suffering are explored through the metaphor of drinking black milk an image from Paul Celan's poem Todesfuge Deathfuge One long lyrical sequence of short poems i child of survivors is scattered throughout the rest of the poems and traces the fallout of the Holocaust as it affected the author It was only after many years of personal psychoanalysis that the author discovered a major inner conflict that affected all her relationships throughout her lifetime As a child she could not bear her mother's severe depressions linked with family members who were murdered by the Nazis she made herself an unconscious promise so she would never follow in her mother's footsteps This is the poem that describes this process i child of survivors could never tolerate the careless closeness of war deprived families i envied them i put a bit of war into them i started fights families were dangerous if i got too close to a family they might be ripped away from me and murdered in a war just around the corner She fought with her words She is still fighting with her words her poems But she has learned to let people into her heart
