

IN CONGRESS, July 4, 1776.

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America.

When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for mankind to declare the political causes which have connected them with another people, it is the duty of that people to publish the causes, that all men may know the truth of the charges on which they have acted, and that they may be able to judge for themselves of the justice of the measures which they have taken. We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. — That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to promote their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, in such a case, dictates that慎重 should be exercised; and that no step should be taken which is likely to be irrevocable and unrepairable to our posterity; that the same should be the result of a long train of abuses and usurpations, which, in every stage, tends to destroy the Rights of the People; that the People are entitled to a fair and candid trial by their equals; that a just and equitable consideration should be given to the claims of the Colonies; that the Colonies have a right to be treated as equal and independent States with the United Kingdom of Great Britain; and that, by the Declaration of Independence, they have become such States, and that they are now united in the bonds of friendship and alliance with the United States of America.
