Framing China Ariane Knüsel, 2016-04-15 Framing China sheds new light on Western relations with and perceptions of China in the first half of the twentieth century In this ground breaking book Ariane Knüsel examines how China was portrayed in political debates and the media in Britain the USA and Switzerland between 1900 and 1950 By focusing on the political economic cultural and social context that led to the construction of the particular images of China in each country the author demonstrates that national interests anxieties and issues influenced the way China was framed and resulted in different portrayals of China in each country The author s meticulous analysis of a vast amount of newspaper and magazine articles commentaries editorials cartoons and newsreels that have previously not been studied before also focuses on the transnational circulation of images of China While previous publications have dealt with the occurrence of the Yellow Peril and Red Menace in particular countries Framing China reveals that these images were interpreted differently in every nation because they both reflected and contributed to the discursive construction of nationhood in each country and were influenced by domestic issues cultural values pre existing stereotypes pressure groups and geopolitical aspirations language English abstract Robert A Gross begins his article Markets Magazines and More with reference to a quote from Ellen Gruber Garvey s book The Adman in the Parlor Magazines and the Gendering of Consumer Culture which summarizes quite well the essential reason behind many developments that led to the creation of an American mass market Why do men make magazines To sell ad space in them What s a magazine So many pages of ad space According to Gross magazines were not so much about content as they were about the advertisements in them Of course magazines had to be sold in order for people to read the ads but the content of the magazine was not designed to improve the reader s life but to get him interested in the product and eventually make him buy it Many scholars such as William Leach see this development in the American media landscape from a purely informational and even missionary character to a consumption and marketing based arena as a major move away from the traditional values of media outlets such as the newspaper and others Leach evaluates this change in his book The Land of Desire where he takes a close look at the changes within the American culture and market He argues that in the decades after the Civil War American capitalism began to produce a distinct culture unconnected to traditional family or community values to religion in any conventional sense or to political democracy It was a secular business and market oriented culture He traces this change from the time of the Protestant settlers and early American community life where the ultimate fulfilment was salvation spiritual blessings for all and an end to poverty to the 1900s where those religious ideals were increasingly transformed and commercialized into personal satisfaction and individual pleasures and profit With the appearance of new pleasure palaces such as department stores theaters restaurants hotels dance halls and amusement parks Americans experienced the joy of personal satisfaction Whereas in the past Leach writes values had taken their character from the church now they were deriving it from business and consumption This democratization of individual desire of the post Civil War culture is probably one of the most notable contributions to modern society according to Leach
