Sustainable Tourism III F. D. Pineda, C. A. Brebbia, 2008 Tourism internationally is the largest economic sector both in terms of earnings and number of people employed Understandably the economic advantages have led to the active promotion of tourism by governments and other institutions often independent of the consequences on the environment The challenge is to balance the need for a low impact on the environment and local culture while helping to generate income employment and the conservation of local ecosystems Sustainable tourism has to be both ecologically and culturally sensitive This book contains papers presented at the Third International Conference on Sustainable Development held in Malta The Meeting focused on empirical work and case studies from around the world and the book offers new insight and best practice guidance for supporting sustainable tourism Adopting a multi disciplinary approach this book examines the practice of sustainable tourism from global travel trends through to destination and site management Of interest to scientists practitioners and policy makers the topics covered in this volume include Art culture and nature Climate change and tourism Coastal issues Community involvement Ecological issues IT and tourism Modelling and estimates Risk and safety Rural tourism Tourism and protected areas Tourism as a factor of development Tourism as a tool of urban development Tourism impact Tourism strategies

Cultural Tourism P. Diaz, M. F. Schmitz, 2013-10-14 A key feature of the tourism system is its ability to adapt to new demands while generating others Tourism s capacity for renewal is based largely on a balance between competitiveness and opportunity to transform places and objects or even people into socioeconomic resources The modern tourist has become more aware of the pitfalls of mass tourism leading to a growing demand for variety As a consequence of environmental awareness tourism has been shown to be one of the economic activities that contribute most to the deterioration of the landscape Today a reinterpretation of the negative effects of conventional tourism has emerged resulting in the gradual appearance of prestigious tourism offers based largely on demand for authentic nature and culture experiences This type of tourism is often associated with responsibility participation and sustainability Tourism planners are aware of this fact and have therefore adapted their products and destinations to new market demands All this can affect the identity of the local people and the landscape of the destination the challenge entails studying ways to preserve the natural and cultural heritage while avoiding the undesirable effects of new forms of tourism The selection of papers presented in this book deal with cultural tourism and comprises case studies and theoretical contributions The volume addresses issues of cultural tourism management demand analysis post tourism new forms of tourism cultural effects on destinations and products of sustainable cultural tourism
