

Beyond Hidden Dangers

Railway Safety into the 21st Century

Stanley Hall

Although statistically railway travel remains one of the safest forms of transport, public concerns about issues of railway safety have risen since the industry was fragmented in its privatisation in the 1990s. This is in part the result of heightened media interest but there is also an undeniable concern that, with the industry now operated by more than 100 different companies, there is not necessarily the same culture of safety consciousness that existed in the days of the unified British Rail. Recent railway accidents such as Ladbroke Grove, Hatfield, Great Heck and Potters Bar have arisen for a wide range of reasons and, whilst the railway industry was not wholly responsible in all cases, the death and destruction wrought highlighted ongoing concerns about investment and maintenance. Such were the concerns, for example, after Hatfield that the national network effectively disintegrated into months of chaos as vast stretches of the track were closely examined.

In Beyond Hidden Dangers, author Stanley Hall, one of Britain's foremost commentators on the subject of railway safety, continues his examination of the causes and effects of railway accidents in the era of privatisation, which he began in his 1999 book for Ian Allan Publishing, Hidden Dangers: Railway Safety in the Era of Privatisation. In this new volume, which examines many of the most recent and high-profile incidents, he looks at how far the railway industry has responded to the realisation that safety could easily have been compromised after the 1995 privatisation and how far the industry has gone in trying to ensure that similar accidents can never recur in the future.

Comprehensively supported with photographs and line drawings, Stanley Hall's detailed analysis in Beyond Hidden Dangers will become required reading for all those, both inside and outside the railway industry, who are interested in issues of railway safety in the modern age.

About the Author

Stanley Hall joined the London, Midland & Scottish Railway at Keighley in 1943 and made his way up through the grade of stationmaster (he was Deputy Stationmaster at King's Cross from 1964 to 1967).
