Finding Criminal Justice (in the Library) Dennis C. Tucker, Frank Schmallegger, 1990 Educators have often been told that we teach people not subjects Yet if we teach a person a subject we still have not fulfilled our mission We must teach him or her how to learn that subject without assistance from us He or she needs to progress beyond the limit of the teacher's knowledge A good foundation in research skills is therefore an essential part of a good education and one that will last a lifetime Years of experience both in teaching and library work have shown us that we educators have often failed in teaching research skills It is the purpose of this book part of the Library Research Series to provide instruction in the basic skills necessary for doing research We are going to look at libraries and how they can be used to the best advantage We will attempt to offer some basic resources and techniques which can be used by students while in school and later by the graduates in the profession
