in the manner of individuals Group Agency offers a new approach to that question and is relevant therefore in a range of fields from philosophy to law politics and the social sciences Christian List and Philip Pettit take the line that there really are group or corporate agents over and above the individual agents who compose them and that a proper social science and a proper approach to law morality and politics have to take account of this fact Unlike some earlier defences of group agency their account is entirely unmysterious in character and despite not being technically difficult is grounded in cutting edge work in social choice theory economics and philosophy
