From book sales to endowments, every little bit helps.

Editor's Note: The ALA Office for Research and Statistics and the ALA Task Force on Financial Resources in Academic Libraries recently completed a study with financial support from the H.W. Wilson Foundation. Results are described in an 80-page report entitled Alternative sources of revenue for academic libraries available from ALA. This article is based on the Executive Summary of that report.

The library literature is full of articles about the financial problems of academic libraries. Much is written about such things as rising costs and how to manage budgets to meet them. Little is known, however, about how academic libraries are raising supplementary funds to augment their regular library budget. The content and structure of financial statistics largely underreported. Neither the National Library Education Statistics (NLES) nor the Association of Research Libraries (ARL) collect statistics on that topic. Sponsored by an ALA Office for Research and the ALA Task Force, we asked to explore it. The result is a ground-breaking report that draws together 147 important examples of alternative sources of academic libraries. This summary article describes what was done and what was learned.

In April 1990 a 700-page questionnaire was mailed to a sample of over 800 academic libraries as defined by the Foundation's criteria and classified by the Association of Higher Education published by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching two-year institutions, liberal colleges, comprehensive colleges and universities, and doctorate-granting institutions. Respondents were asked to describe their revenue in the most recent fiscal year from five potential alternative sources of revenue: services, sales, and special events; computerized catalogs and databases; searching and printing; fees and charges; and library endowments. The report contains 20 tables and 12 figures that present results in detail.

General

1. Some libraries in each of the four Carnegie categories get some revenue from each of the five alternative sources.

2. Each category of institutions is most likely to get some revenue from each of the five sources and more likely to get larger amounts of revenue from any source.

3. The total number of revenues from all alternative sources varies widely by Carnegie category. Respondents reporting more than $10,000 from
